CANADIAN CONSUMES FOUR POUNDS OF TEA

The average Canadian consumes approximately four pounds of tea a year and the average Englishman consumes 9.15 pounds, according to a report of the Department of Commerce. The United Kingdom ranks first in consumption among non-producing countries and during later years there has been a steady upward trend. Per capita tea consumption in the United States has been showing a downward tendency and the average consumption there is three quarters of a pound.

PROVINCE NOW TO HAVE PEONY DAY

OCTOBER 1, TO BE RECOGNIZED AS ALBERTA PEONY PLANTING DAY

Tulip days, those glorious days, make us think of those glorious displays in some of the Pacific coast cities. In Alberta over 600 organizations are being circulated by the Town and Rural Planning Board in support of the suggestions of Mrs. F. E. Wyman Vice President of the U.F.W.A. that October 1st, of this and succeeding years should be a day on which the people of this province should plant peony roots. The peony is one of our hardiest perennials and one of our most attractive flowers.

Circulars are being sent to the secretaries of the U.F.W.A. Local Women's Institutes and to Horticultural Societies. These organizations are being requested on behalf of men being interested to place early orders for peony roots with their nurseries. Already several organizations and those interested in horticulture have expressed themselves as in greatest sympathy with the movement, states Mr. Horace L. Seymour, Director of Town Planning.

It is also hoped to interest the school children of the province on their return to school and that peony roots will be planted at each school and one or two at every home, the cost of the ordinary varieties of white, pink or red peonies being very reasonable.

Circulars in regard to the planting of peony roots are being distributed and may be obtained at the office of the Director of Town Planning, Edmonton, Alberta.

PRIZE AWARDS AT THE BIG LOCAL EXHIBITION

As was noted last week the 1930 agricultural society's fair went over with a bang, and the interest remained centered in the hundreds of exhibitors and the merry old midway till after midnight of the last day. In the horse race tournament, the flanks gave P. Wiley first place with G. Murray second and I. Kelly third, while the first day's baseball saw the Wainwright team walk away with the handsome challenge cup and medals after several hard fought games.

In the open basketball tournament the team from Hardisty took first money, while Wainwright beat Hughenden for second money.

The horse racing on both days saw a good following, and the money went to C. Cooper in the pony race with Allard second. In the free-for-all, Allard again came second to Pete Twardy's horse as the result of several false runs.

Mrs. Baynton, with her record of being in her 86th year took the prize for being the oldest person on the grounds, while the family of Mr. J. Marchand, of Pabayan, numbering in all fifteen, was the winner of the largest family award.

OIL NEWS FROM THE WAINWRIGHT FIELD

(By W. A. Knowles)

Sensor Oil and Gas Co. have completed cementing in 20-inch casing at 708 feet. This will be allowed to set for a couple of weeks after which it will be drilled through and three-shift drilling resumed with the intention of completing the hole as quickly as possible.

Belthwaite have not yet resumed work on their location where No. 1 is cored into an excellent sand.

Recent developments have indicated that a prominent oil refining and distribution concern are prepared to put in an initial 700-barrel refining unit, as soon as certain agreements can be completed with owners owning producing sites and adjoining acreage that may be drilled into production. With the completion of some of the producers, a limited amount of money for refining purposes being loaned by the refining concern, there should be a 400-barrel daily capacity available for refining purposes within a short time.

Considerable further drilling depends to some extent on market distribution of the prospective product to put in an initial 700-barrel refining unit, as soon as certain agreements can be completed with owners owning producing sites and adjoining acreage that may be drilled into production. With the completion of some of the producers, a limited amount of money for refining purposes being loaned by the refining concern, there should be a 400-barrel daily capacity available for refining purposes within a short time.

The 700-barrel installation will be a first unit of the eventual plant and will be equipped to run crude and finish the resulting product to desired standards as required by the market. It has been stated that the Canadian National is prepared to use a large quantity when refined to their special requirements. The intention is to locate the refinery on a site available in town and very adaptable to the purpose.

Mrs. Dave Davison visited friends in the city for a few days last week.

PLANS BEING LAID FOR BIG REFINERY

EDMONTON BUSINESS MEN AT GATHERING START INITIAL PROCEEDINGS

Mayor Forster, J. John L. Dougherty, and others journeyed to the city on Friday last for the purpose of taking up with a number of Edmonton business men the matter of the erection of a new big refinery to handle the problem of all the oil wells in the Wainwright field.

In dealing with the matter the Edmonton Bulletin reports as follows:—

Whatever suggestions were made as to the important nature of the meeting of boardholders in the Wainwright oil field held in Edmonton on Friday, they were amply fulfilled by the announcements made and the business transacted.

Provided that certain conditions are carried out a new refinery for the Wainwright field is assured, backed with all the capital and influence of the large western oil companies. The name of the company was divulged at the meeting, but by reason of certain preliminary detail it is not available for general publication. Commencing with an initial expenditure of some $50,000 the cost of the refinery will run into a quarter of a million.

The meeting held at the Chamber of Commerce offices presided over by E. T. Malden, chairman of the oil section of the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce, and with John Blue as secretary, attracted a very large gathering. It was a revelation of the number of people who are interested in the Wainwright field, and great attention was devoted to everything that took place. M. C. Forster, mayor of Wainwright was among those present.

J. L. Dougherty, one of the best-known oil operators in the Wainwright field, explained that negotiations that have been taking place with the company—together with the main features of the conditions laid down as the company insists upon all leaseholders in the field entering into a contract covering at least five years to deliver to the refinery any oil produced by them. This agreement is asked for by the company in the case of non-producing leases as well as those that are active.

At the close of the statement the chairman and Mr. Dougherty were appointed as a sub-committee to appoint a committee of five for the purpose of dealing with the situation and endeavoring to meet the conditions laid down.

Mr. Dougherty said that he anticipated the assistance of Edmonton in the matter as Wainwright was very much allied to Edmonton, for every $100,000 spent in the town of Wainwright, at least $30,000 of them come to Edmonton.

The speaker in outlining the proposals said that he has been working for two years at Wainwright, in drilling an oil well, and all the financial that he had obtained had been spent legitimately on the work, and not on fancy autos. But having obtained a commercial well at Wainwright, the question immediately arises—What can be done with the oil?

"THE SEA BAT" MARVELLOUS FILM

SHOWING AT ELITE THEATRE THURSDAY, FRIDAY & SATURDAY

A definitely stirring melodrama, "The Sea Bat," at the Elite Theatre Thursday Friday and Saturday, is at the same time a novelty in pictures. It gives us a sea picture, with a difference. The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer authors have painted a stirring story around that strange and fearsome beast of the sea, the sea bat, a form of giant ray which enfolds men in its two-toned marvellous wings.

When John Milton tricks Nib Ather so that he is killed under-water by the bat, you get but the first of the thrills that come in this story, culminating in the romance between Charles Blackford, escaped convict in minister's clothes, and Raquel Torres. The picture moves with extreme rapidity and is a succession of kaleidoscopic shots, with the tropic palms above and below the sea.

We are told that this picture was taken in tropical Mexico and we accept that statement as the investigation is unusually accurate. Blackford takes the aging heroine, with a difference, and as a succession of Nib Ather and Nib Ather's closely behind him. Wesley Ruggles has directed the vivid story in a finely intelligent manner.

ANNUAL GATHERING ON AUGUST 20th

CEREAL CROPS FIELD DAY DOMINION FARM STATION AT LACOMBE

The annual Cereal Crops Field Day will be held at the Dominion Experimental Station, Lacombe, on Wednesday day, August 20th. This will be a day of special interest to all farmers interested in the growing of good crops but particularly will it interest men here of the Seed Growers' Association and Co-operators who are growing varieties under numbers.

The Dominion Cereals, Mr. L. H. Newman, will be at the Station on this date and will discuss all questions pertaining to varieties and crop improvement. It is possible that the date, August 20th, may be a little late for some farmers but it is the earliest date on which we could arrange for Mr. Newman to visit the Lacombe Station.

A meeting of the Alberta section of the Canadian Seed Growers' Association will be held at the close of the field meeting.

All farmers are invited to visit the Station for this field day. Bring your family and invite your friends. Cakes will be provided for lunch under the trees. Make this a day of pleasure and profit. Programme to commence at 1.30 sharp.

MR. AND MRS. THOS. B. REED

"Sargon has brought health, strength and happiness to both my wife and me and I would not take all the money in the world for the good it has done us," declared Thomas B. Reed, well-to-do farmer and lumberman, residing at 919 Holmes street, Kansas City, Mo.

"Five years ago when on the train going from Bonanza, Canada, to Calgary, I had a severe attack of acute indigestion and nobody thought I would live to reach my destination. When I came to myself I was in the hospital at Calgary.

"Since then I have suffered constantly from bilious attacks and splitting headaches that lasted for days at a time. Everything I ate disagreed with me. I had smothering spells that made me think I would die. I would get so dizzy I could hardly stand up, and I was constiated all the time. I was nervous and did not get a good night's sleep for years. Many nights I would get up and sit in a chair for hours.

"Sargon made a well man of me. My nerves are steady as a die and I sleep like a boy. My old-time strength has returned and I have gained 15 pounds. I feel fine all the time."

"Sargon helped my wife, who is the mother of 13 children, the same way. She has actually gained 15 pounds in weight and feels better and stronger than in many years.

Mr. Reed was formerly a worshipful master in the Masonic order and Mrs. Reed is a beloved member of the Methodist Church.

Sargon may be obtained in Wainwright from the Wainwright Pharmacy.

The Night Visitor

A small but growing agency. A small, but not growing salary. However the smallness of the salary did not trouble him; what he wanted was the post. The post enabled him to know when people of means were shutting up their homes. Only a week earlier Mrs. Luce Reels across the counter of the agency, while receiving various tickets from him and you chanced herself told him all relevant details of the Reels family movements.

He had asked her if she had an "All-in" insurance policy on the Reels flat. No, she had not. In her opinion to insure the contents—especially jewelry—of the flat on the eight floor of a block was to throw money away. True she possessed a ruby necklace far too valuable to expose to the risks of train-de-luce. But Mrs. Luce Reels as she quietly and confidentially explained to the urbane and confidential Mr. Faasbrooke, had discovered the ideal method of keeping jewelry from harm. Saying no word to nobody, not even to her husband she had just deposited it, as it was without cases, on the top of a wardrobe, where no burglar would ever dream of looking. Mr. Faasbrooke had openly expressed his admiration at her ingenuity.

Thus, on the night of Anthony's retirement, Mr. Faasbrooke knew positively that the Reels flat would be empty. He knew almost everything as to the flat and its tenants. The one trifling item which he did not know was that Mr. Reels had telephoned a emergency in the morning to ask whether the train reservations could be disposed of, and had been regretfully told that they could not be, time being too short for so complex an operation.

Mr. Faasbrooke in evening dress had reached the eighth floor of the vast block by the simple device of going up in the lift—to the ninth floor, and walking down the stairs to the eighth. The night liftman, inquisitively and utterly unassuming, had saluted him with respect taking him for a friend of some tenant of the ninth floor—a friend who knew his way about the place. The principal bedrooms of the Reels flat gave on the north quadrangle. The service room (for waiters) next to the Reels flat was, as generally at that hour, empty. Mr. Faasbrooke entered it by the door and left it by the window.

In a minute he was on one of the Reels balconies. In another minute he had opened a French window. The blind was drawn, the curtains were drawn; but neither blind nor curtains can present any serious obstacle to a determined detective. Mr. Faasbrooke stood within the room which was as dark as a poplar night. He used his electric torch. Then it was that his ear caught a sound—indeed a cough.

Thoughts ran through Mr. Faasbrooke's head in a galloping succession. Burglary was a mug's game the last resort of idiots he had been well aware of this fact but he had forgotten it. Now he was aware of it again. You ran fantastic risks. And the profits even when you could realize them with safety were entirely insufficient to atone for the risk. He had never been caught, though at least once he had escaped arrest only by the clemency of heaven (in any case he was caught now). He must act in a stantly, wisely, perfectly.

He shut off the torch as a preliminary precaution. Furtive Anthony Reels switched on the bed-light. The pair were face to face. Anthony had the formidable appearance of a touselled madman, capable of inordinate homicidal furies. And Mr. Faasbrooke though admittedly an idiot, was not idiot enough to carry arms in the pursuit of his nocturnal profession.

"Are you a specialist they've sent?" Anthony asked at a loss.

"Yes," Mr. Faasbrooke replied.

"I'm supposed to be very ill," said Anthony. "Do specialists carry torches?"

"I do," said Mr. Faasbrooke.

A pause.

"I see what it is," Anthony went on with a lustrous smile, suddenly enlightened. "You are a cat-burglar, that's what you are. Evening dress and all!"

"No," said Mr. Faasbrooke, feebly and unconvincedly.

"What are you doing here?"

"I'm an ass," said Mr. Faasbrooke.

"I daresay," Anthony agreed glancing at the timepiece. "But you can't come along being an ass in people's bedrooms at twelve o'clock at night."

"Isn't done," Anthony sprang up threateningly. "You lose out. No, not by the door. The way you got in. By the window—must have been. And look quick!"

"I can't," said Mr. Faasbrooke.

Anthony's tone suddenly changed to the mildly inquiring:

"Now tell me why not? I've often wanted to know all about cat-burglars. Tell me, and I'll let you go. I promise."

"It's like this, said Mr. Faasbrooke.

"I took off my overcoat—"

"Oh! So you had an overcoat?"

"Yes I was in the service room. I took off my overcoat, and threw it on the window there on to your balcony here and then I just sort of sprang from the window-sill on to the edge of your balcony, and hung on to the rail and climbed over, and here I was. But I couldn't jump back from the balcony to the window-sill I hope I make myself clear."

"You do? You do?" said Anthony.

"And where's your overcoat now?"

"Hanging on the balcony railing."

"That'll do," said Anthony. "Remove yourself. I've had enough of you. If you meet anybody in the pass age or the hall, don't argue. Just go straight on. There are no tickets on the front door. It's the top one."

That you need, I say. One minute, I have dropped my cough lozenges under the bed. I'll pick them up for me, there's a good fellow."

It was while Mr. Faasbrooke was obediently retreating under the bed that Luce Reels addressed herself to the scene.

Mr. Faasbrooke recognized the vicious voice of his late customer Luce Reels, and he feigned death—an example of what is called nature's protective mimicry. Luce's mind had been full of another matter; but the strange spectacle of a man on his knees and his head beneath the bed, dislodged the other matter with a jerk.

"Who is the gentleman?" she demanded.

The imitation corpse did not stir.

"He just looked in to pick up my cough lozenges. They're snuggled somewhere," Anthony explained, with a half-maniacal laughter.

"But who is he?"

"I know everything about him except his name, my dear, Anthony explained.

"But who let him in?"

"He let himself in—by the window."

"He's a burglar—a cat burglar. As he's been so kind about my cough lozenges, I've promised to let him go. And to Mr. Faasbrooke, now then! those cough lozenges! Get up!"

Mr. Faasbrooke got up, with what dignity he could summon, and, seizing his hat, deposited the box of cough lozenges on the table. Luce Reels gazed at him. He was rather a handsome fellow, and possessed a good slim figure. Further he was stylishly dressed, though at the moment his clothes happened to be a bit rumpled.

"Anthony," Luce said at length mildly reproving, and yet humorous—as was proper to a sickman "how absurd of you! This is one of the gentlemen from the travel agency. I expect he's called about those train reservations. It was very kind of you, Mr.—I don't quite remember your name. Please excuse my husband. He's far from well."

"Of course madam," said Mr. Faasbrooke.

Luce added, to nobody in particular.

"Though why Mary should have shown him in here I don't understand. Whereupon Anthony said crossly.

"Do people call at midnight about train reservations? And Mary didn't show him in. Haven't I told you he came in by the window? Why can't you believe me? If you will take the trouble to look you will see his overcoat hanging on the balcony—unless it's fallen into the quadrangle. And I wish you'd shut either the door or window. Why do you always leave the door open. The draft in this room is enough to blow the carpet off the floor."

Luce went to the window and shut it, and in doing so she deserted the overcoat; which vision had the effect of changing her ideas.

At the same instant, that is to say simultaneously with the turning of Luce's back, Mr. Faasbrooke shot to ward the door. But with even greater velocity Anthony shot from the bed, and grasped Mr. Faasbrooke's arm as in a steely vise; the grip of ten homicidal inches.

"No, you don't!" cried he. "No, you don't! I promised I'd let you go, and I will; but you're making mischief between me and my wife and I won't stand for it. My wife thinks I'm off my head, and you are letting her think so. We did you say? Of course, madam? Are you a burglar or are you not? Yes or no?"

"Yes," responded Mr. Faasbrooke.

"You go, and I'll stand in that corner," commanded Anthony, indicating a corner by the window and far from the door.

"I see it all," Luce burst out.

"And she did see it all."

"You better get back into bed," she said to her husband.

"I am getting back into bed," said Anthony bitterly.

And he did get back into bed—coughed, and took a cough lozenge.

"To think," said Luce, "that a so-called travel agency should deliberately employ a man like you—worrying things out of their customers, and—"

"Don't be silly," Anthony stopped her. "Deliberately? You surely don't suppose they had the slightest idea what kind of a man he was. The travel agency is perfectly innocent!"

Ignoring this reproach, Luce Reels said with a new excitement:

"Has he been into my bedroom. My rubies—"

"He hasn't," Anthony stopped her again.

"Are you sure?"

"Of course, I'm sure!" Anthony shouted nearly beside himself with rage at her doubts. "Why can't you believe me? You wouldn't believe me when I told you the fellow was a cat burglar, and now for the second time you are not believing me. Why is it that women will believe anybody sooner than their husbands?"

Ignoring this reproach also, Luce said: "I shall go round to the agency tomorrow morning and tell them. You'll see—"

"Unnecessary, madam. I shall not be there any more," Mr. Faasbrooke said in.

"No," said Luce with liveliness. "You won't be there. You'll be in the look up. Didn't I tell you," said Anthony "I've given the man my word that he may go free?"

"If you did, you were very silly," said Luce suddenly, ennobled by the sound of her own voice.

"That's neither here nor there," said Anthony. "The point is that I gave him my word. And permit me to say like it is very bad manners for you to call me a silly or a fool of a complete stranger—especially a burglar. What will the country's chances be of the intellectual class?"

"If you don't want to be called silly," Luce retorted, "you shouldn't be silly. I say it was very silly of you and I stick to it. And anyhow I've not given my word and I won't. I mean to telephone to the police and neither you nor anyone else can stop me."

Her accents had been quietly firm. Her self-control, however, seemed to be powerless to induce self-control in her husband. He seized her wrist in a grip even cruder than that which he had employed on Mr. Faasbrooke. Then he seized her other wrist in a similar grip. Then he shook her. The victimized wife was being subjected to physical violence. She had an impulse to cry out; but she nobly restrained it. As for Anthony, he felt that he was revenging upon the person of Luce the innumerable grievances of the whole splendid, too-patient tribe of husbands against all wives.

"Don't forget you're ill," said Luce grimly setting her teeth. "You'll only make yourself worse by these goings on."

"Oh!" cried Anthony. "So at last you've remembered that I'm ill have you? Here am I, ill and I have a nurse and a doctor and you take them both away from me. I'm left a lone for hours and hours. Nobody cares. I might have died. I might be a perfect nobody in this house that you made me take though I didn't want it."

"Who's the most important person in this flat? Possibly you think it's yourself. Well it isn't. You're nobody, nobody! And you think you are everybody. Every woman thinks she's everybody. That's what's the matter with women, and the matter with men is that they stand it because they're so curiously good-natured."

At this point in his shocking tirade Anthony paused, not for want of breath, but apparently because he could not think of anything more effective to say and wished to avoid an anticlimax.

Luce thought, horror-struck.

"That is really what he thinks about me in his heart. At last I know the truth and my life is ruined. All is over with our marriage."

But Luce, like every woman was an astounding person, capable in a supreme crisis of feats of self-mastery and heroic duplicity that no male could rival. Aloud she merely remarked, with breath-taking casualness: "Mr. Burglar, you will please fetch the doctor, he is in the room opposite across the passage."

There was no answer. She looked round the burglar had vanished. The door was open.

Luce's first thought was not. "He has escaped me after all, but 'How much did he hear?"

She then addressed Anthony:

"I should like you to know that poor Rosie has got influenza. A rather high temperature. That's why I fetched both the nurse and the doctor."

"Ah," he yelled. "I knew it! I knew it was that horrible spotted child of yours!" (yours' means yours). "And so I'm nobody! If you have to choose between me and the child, you choose the child. A nice thing! I tell you once and for all—"

The doctor entered, and at sight of the excellent middle-aged, concentrated Dr. Bain, Anthony did subside.

"Did you hear him?" Luce murmured.

"Yes," replied the doctor. "He's delirious, that's all. He pushed a thermometer into Anthony's mouth, and there was silence. Yes. Hm! Excited. It's nothing. I'll give him a dose. Rosie'll be all right. The nurse is really A-1."

"I never thought of delirium!" Luce muttered.

"What do you say?" said the doctor.

"Nothing."

She began to cry. She bent down and kissed the unofficial representative of the great trade union of husbands and stroked his damp hair.

"Poor neglected darling," she whispered.

"You know, you are simply asking for flu kissing the patient that way," remarked the doctor.

"I don't care," said Luce.

And she didn't care. More, she utterly forgot about Mr. Faasbrooke.

NOW THE FUEL SPECIALIST

Rivalry between the old line coal dealer and the oil burner dealer is fast disappearing. Instead of fighting the inroads of modern automatic heating equipment the retail coal man is setting up oil tanks and going after his share of the increasing demand for fuel oil. A recent survey discovered 512 dealers in 320 American cities who sell both coal and oil.

The coal dealer is learning that it pays to be a "fuel specialist." In these days of terrific heating he is called upon to supply the kind of fuel best adapted to specialized types of heating plants. If his customer burns coal he must know whether "egg," "furnace," "stove," "pea," or "buck wheat" will give the best results in that particular house. If the customer operates an automatic burner he must understand the characteristics of the three grades of fuel oil used in this type of heating plant.

The recent survey by the Bureau of Mines and the U. S. Census Bureau shows that there are now 535,000 oil burners in American homes, using one and a quarter billion gallons of fuel oil in a year. During the next six years the number of domestic oil burners has increased at an average of 100 per cent each year.

The Wedding Ring

BY H. C. BAILEY

On a winter afternoon, Edith the parlor-maid, told Mr. Fortune that a Dr. Marshall was waiting for him. In the opinion of Edith, he was a forger.

"All right. Bring him along," said Reggie, who had returned home after a two-hour absence.

The next moment Edith came flustered. "He's not in here, sir. He must have gone."

It was an hour later when Edith appeared again. "A lady, sir. She's Dr. Marshall's wife, she says. Madame Marshall. She asked if he'd been here and wants to see you."

"You told her he had been?" Reggie frowned.

"No sir, I didn't. Edith reproved him with conscious virtue. I said I'd inquire."

"That's right. I'll see her."

A dim dark woman tripped in. Mr. Fortune? I am Madame Marshall—she pronounced it as a French word. Reggie murmured that he hadn't the honor. "You know my husband, Dr. Marshall?"

Reggie contemplated her with half shut eyes. She was young but many years more than a girl's sharp knowing face not English, possibly French. Not too well off. Discreet dark clothes. Like a secretary or superior clerk. But she had a wedding-ring all right.

"He's been with you this afternoon. You've seen him?"

Reggie smiled. I'm afraid this will not do, you know. I'm a medical man. I can't tell you whether anybody has been to consult me or not.

"But I am his wife, Mr. Fortune."

"Quite. Naturally you have his confidence," Reggie bowed.

"His confidence? Perfectly he came to you this afternoon and he is not returned to me."

"My dear lady—Reggie smiled—'are you suggesting that I have made away with your husband?'"

"Oh, heavens! Why are you so cruel with me? I am distracted. My poor husband, he is vanished. Mr. Fortune did you see anything strange in him? What did he say to you? What did you advise him?"

Reggie shook his head. "If I had given professional advice to a man I shouldn't be able to say what it was."

"You will not help me?" she cried. "That is brutal! She whirled to the door."

Reggie dined at home and alone. It was late when he finished his letters and he took them out himself to catch the last post. He felt hurried behind him. He stepped aside and the blow of a sand-bag swished by his head, another hit his side and sent him staggering against the railing of an area he found the gate, and as the sand-bags hit him again he went through, fell and rolled down the steps to the kitchen door.

The door was opening. A butler in shirt sleeves said: "What's the game? Hurt yourself have you? Why it's Mr. Fortune!"

"Yes, I think so," Reggie answered to his feet, holding on to the butler. "Hurt bad sir? However did you fall down the area?"

"I was just going to post—and some fellows jostled me—and the gate came open—and I came down—and that's that. See if I've dropped my letters in the area, will you? But the letters were not to be found. Whose house is this?"

"Sir Roger Brown's sir. But I'm afraid he's gone to bed."

"That's all right. I didn't come to see him. Would you mind helping me back to my place?"

The butler helped him like a father. But the darkness of the street was empty. Reggie limped to the phone. "Is that you Lomas? Fortune speaking. I want you to send some stout follow to watch my home. What's the matter? I don't know. Rather queer things have been happening. You'll come around yourself? That's very gratifying." He limped up to his dressing-room and had removed his damaged clothes when a car drove up and the bell rang. Lomas, accompanied by men of comforting solidity, were at the door.

"Good Gad!" Lomas stared at him. "My dear fellow!"

"Yes. The eye blackens rapidly."

"My dear Reginald—Lomas took him by the arm—"you come to bed. We've got men watching the house. It's all right now. He helped Reggie to bed with solicitude. "Now what about a doctor young man?"

"Oh no. The medical profession is superfluous. We'll keep it quite quiet. Give them something to think about."

"Who do you mean?"

"I haven't the slightest idea. Dr. Marshall, perhaps. With him Madame Marshall. Somebody must yearn to know whether I am a corpse or otherwise."

"And he told the story."

"Let's take it from the beginning," said Lomas. "The natural explanation is that these Marshalls were engaged in the attack."

"Yes. Some connection between the Marshalls and the sand-bags is indicated. But why does anyone want to play poor Reginald?"

"As there's no question of interference with a case in hand, the motive must be revenge. Someone you have convicted wants to get even with you."

Reggie sighed. "But there are difficulties. You can fit the vanishing doctor into revenge. Or Madame. But not the two of them together."

"Quite simple. Marshall couldn't get at you, so Madame was sent to discover if you were going to be out forever."

"That's why she was so anxious to know whether I had seen Marshall?"

"I wonder?"

"Naturally she wanted to find out if you had any suspicions."

"Yes. She wanted to find out what I made of the vanishing Marshall. But I don't think she knew whether I had seen him or not."

"No doubt. Marshall was sent to attack you, got scared, though he was suspected, and bolted. So the people behind him wouldn't know what happened."

"Theory number two," said Reggie. "You can have which you like Lomas but not both."

Lomas stared. "There's no new theory. I'm only working out this idea of a conspiracy of revenge."

"My dear chap! First theory: Marshall went back to the hypothetical people behind him and said I was not a doctor, so they sent Madame to see if I'd come in. Second theory: Marshall got the wind up and bolted, so the people behind him didn't know what happened to him and Madame was sent to find out. All right. But one must be wrong."

"There's no real difficulty," Lomas pronounced. "Don't you see, it's obvious Marshalls—"

"Oh, yes. My friends with the sand there are people in it besides the Marshalls."

"Whether Marshall has bolted in a funk or has been working with them all the time doesn't matter much. The point is, we have to deal with a gang who are out for your blood, Well, they won't get it now. I'll see to that, old man."

"Yes, thanks. But this revenge motive is only a hypothesis."

"Well, some of the facts drop in into it. What worried Madame was that she didn't know whether I'd seen Marshall or not. What she was afraid was that he'd told me something."

"Why naturally, she was afraid, as the time had bolted, he might have given them away."

"As right. Try again. When I went on, I had some letter set post. Those letters didn't go into the area with me. They must have been taken by the sand-bag men. The only possible inference is that these fellows wanted to make sure I shouldn't send information of anything Marshall had told me."

"Good Gad," said Lomas. "That's an odd thing." You'd been hours in the house. Anything urgent? you would have telephoned."

"Yes. That's assuming Marshall came to tell me something short and snappy. But they seem to have thought it would want writing out."

"What on earth could that be?"

"I haven't the slightest idea. Possibly some code. He called himself a doctor. It might be something medical. It might be anything. But you see there's another possible hypothesis. Marshall came to give me information, and because I may have it, somebody tried to do me in."

"Quite. But we come to the same point. The only thing that Marshall told me was that he was a doctor. He is not in the medical directory. Edith thinks he is foreign. He left this house some time in the dusk. Madame is a dark thin thing, in dark clothes, not too good. Newly-new wedding-ring—very yellow—she's certainly foreign. She went off in a taxi with a man in it, about eight o'clock. That's all the available facts. I would like to sleep, if it could be managed. Good-by."

"My dear fellow," said Lomas affectionately. "Sleep the clock around. We'll look after you."

But the energies of the men who watched over Reggie's house were not called for. And day by day his deepened inquiries to the Criminal Investigation Department became it is true became more satirical. Till Lomas brought Superintendent Bell to lunch. "You've been peevish, Reginald. I always find Bell has a soothing influence."

"We haven't been dawdling," Bell protested as they sat at lunch. "You know this isn't an easy case. Absolutely the only thing we had to work on was these Marshalls. I've got a taxi driver who picked up a man and a woman in Regent Street and drove them to your house and back to the Marble Arch. That is not going to do us a lot of good. He did not notice the man. It was the woman who did the talking. He describes her as you did."

Then about Marshall. A taxi was engaged by a chap in your street about ten o'clock that day and drove him to the Victory Hotel—a fair chap. Well they've had a Doctor and Madame Marshall there. Come in this morning. On that evening, Mr. Fortune went out again and a taxi took a big man like him to Hertford Place—you know—in Westminster. He didn't give a number; he wasn't seen get in anywhere. There we've lost him. He hasn't been back to the hotel as far as we know. Madame stayed on two days. Then she left. The hotel noticed nothing special about them. Thought they were foreigners. Only their names in the register."

"Bell, have you told me all?" said Reggie.

"Well, of course, there was another clue—the sand-bagging. That was a professional crook's job. If you had not thought of going down that area they'd have done you in."

"Professional work," Reggie smiled. "Well, we don't have sand-bags for fingers."

"Yes. Yes. Again foreign talent is suggested. Another little point. The directing intelligence is cautious. If they'd used the knife, probably they would have got me. But it would be plain murder. If I'd been found dead with a fractured skull and a bruise or two I should have gone to the grave as a traffic accident. If the thing had gone according to plan, there would have been no policemen sniffing after Marshalls. Two instances. First: that somebody don't want us to know the Marshalls, though Marshall came running round to me. Second: that the somebody is cautious, far-sighted mind, but frightened. He can plan, he has large resources, he is in some sort of danger, and he will do anything to save him. I don't like it at all Lomas."

He led the way to the library and sat them smoking. "Yes the problem is, what was Marshall coming to tell me?"

"You give up the theory of revenge Lomas said."

"I never said it. No. I wonder how things would have worked out if I had told Madame that I hadn't seen Marshall."

"Bell frowned at him. Why didn't you tell her just that. Seems the natural thing."

"Because she wasn't natural."

"What did you think she was up to?"

"I hadn't the slightest idea. But I thought if she believed I knew something, she'd show her hand."

"Your mistake," said Lomas. "Oh no. We had a trump played. Attempt to murder me. It didn't take the trick. But it showed you the sort of cards they have already got. And the card they're afraid of—what Marshall knows."

"My dear fellow. What could Marshall have told you?"

Again Reggie murmured. "I have not the slightest idea. Then he sat up. Anything else occur to you Bell?"

"Not to me, Mr. Everything is broken down."

"I wouldn't say that. There are points. Curious diffusion of the Marshalls over London. He goes to Westminster and vanishes. She is picked up in Regent Street and drops at the Marble Arch. Another curious point. Madame stays on at the hotel two days after the vanishing of Marshall."

"Probably waiting for news of your death."

"I wonder. Well, take the definite spots in Marshall's movements. Who lives in Hertford Place?"

Bell smiled. "Absolutely first-class people. Young Rimginton of the Rimginton firm, Sir Blayns Gordon, Lady Ester Bolymer, Viscount Ford and Mr. Spensley, the architect. Don't sound much like foreign crooks do they? However, we tried them all. Nothing known of any Dr. Marshall calling. Gordon's away. But I saw his butler. He's all right."

"Yet the elusive and foreign Mar. had picked out this small, distinguished street. Curious and curious. Architect? I think not. Ford—he's a discharged politician. No. Lady Ester's a lumb. I've met her. Gordon—Blayne—Gordon—he looked at Lomas."

"Chemical manufacturer. Leading man in his time."

"Yes that's so. Reggie blew smoke rings. "Yes. And Gordon is away. Was Gordon away when Marshall drove down to Hertford Place?"

"I didn't get all that," Bell frowned. "The butler just said he was away. And nobody had called that night. Quite clear."

"One more house. The Rimgintons have a finger in a lot of pies."

"My dear fellow," Lomas was impatient. "Historic firm. Sound as the bank—and as straight. It's absurd to suspect Rimginton or Gordons of conspiracy with crooks."

"I didn't get all that," Bell frowned. "The butler just said he was away. And nobody had called that night. Quite clear."

THE RELIEF QUESTION

One of the most pressing questions facing urban and rural councils at the present time is the one of relief to indigents, as is pointed out by the editor of the Toronto Mercury.Canada being a comparatively new country, and supposedly being blessed with ample opportunity for all and sundry, there are no such things as poor houses, work houses, or properly organized facilities for taking care of the poor. In fact, the expression that Canada is a place where you get on or get out, is to a very large extent literally true. But even so, while this may apply to nearly all the residents of Canada, there are always the few, who, through their own fault or the fault of someone else, or perhaps through nothing at all, find themselves in a position of distress and compelled to seek assistance from the first public body at hand.The Municipal Act says a municipality must supply the necessities of life to indigents within its boundaries, or within its own boundaries for a certain length of time. This would perhaps be fair enough if conditions were anything like those in the country from which the law was evidently copied. In other countries, people especially poor people, travel little,
and it is common for people to live within a few miles radius all their lives. Therefore local bodies would have a direct responsibility to the indigenes of these localities. In Alberta conditions are different. We will take the case of a man of 60. With no friends or relatives and physically unfit for daily labor, this man would become a public charge upon whatever municipality he happened to reside in long enough to fulfill the legal requirements. The fact that prior to his making formal application for relief, he might have been adroitly "jostled" from one municipality to the other, and that the one which pays him monthly relief sum is no more morally responsible than a half a dozen others, is not considered at all.Municipal finance is comparatively simple if things work out according to plan. Prior to the beginning of the year a "budget" or "estimate" are made out, and these expected expenditures for the coming year.
Remembering that the object of all councils is to keep taxes down to the lowest possible commensurate with proper service, the taxes are always set as low as possible. Therefore with a fixed income (all of which is paid in and not come in) and the money spoken for before it is collected, a few indigent claims literally throw a monkey wrench into the financial machine.It is quite evident that in a country with a vigorous climate like ours individuals cannot be allowed to starve or freeze, and that to those in actual need of it assistance must be given. The only question is who shall bear all of the cost. As we have said at the present time, the municipalities must, yet it is obvious to all that with our large floating population, that this is not a fair apportionment of the responsibility.The relief indigent problem is getting more acute as time goes on. Men are brought by governments from four corners of the earth to live and work here and those that fall by the wayside while travelling around should be as much a case of the provincial government as the actual municipality they finally wind up in.
A system similar to that of the Mother's Allowance Act by which half the allowance is paid by the council and half by the provincial government, would be better than the present system. It does not relieve them of all their responsibility, while at the same time it does not lead upon a financial harassed council all the care of indigents who have gone as far as they could.

RESPONSIBILITIES OF MEMBERS

Now that the government of Canada is Conservative, it is doubtful about it, it will be interesting to note what part the U.F.A. members from Alberta will play in parliament for the next five years says an exchangeWhether they support the Conservative party in any or all of its undertakings will not alter Mr. Bennett's policy in the least, or if they vote against the proposed tariff measures when the division comes will not necessarily influence the Government to deviate from its policy, to make work in Canada for Canadians
by making the conditions favorable to manufacturers and other interests
so that our people may make themselves and not have to import, that which can be manufactured here at home.Since the U.F.A. group no longer hold the balance of power they can not dictate to the Government, nor function as a bloc either constructively or negatively in initiating or defeating proposed legislation. Hence, their usefulness as a bloc or group no longer exists. (It never did exist in the judgment of the majority of Canadians). The whole agrarian group has dwindled from 61 members in 1921 to 41 in 1926, to 15 in 1930, and next election will in all probability see further diminution.The two labor members from Winnipeg lost no time in announcing that no opposition would be offered the Government, by themselves as long as the laboring man was not injured by its proposed legislation.Their fears are unnecessary as the balance between capital and labor will be maintained by the government, just as capably as it is being done by the McDonald Labor Government, in England and it is to be hoped with speedier success in relieving unemployment. Our government is big enough to take care of all classes and conditions by careful administration and introduction, where necessary of beneficial legislation to tide us over the present depression,
and to see that no particular class will be exploited or discriminated against, to the undue advantage of another.Should the U.F.A. members as individuals line up with the Conservatives and Liberals, and accept the responsibilities of party government,
they would have an equal, if not better chance for re-election, as they wish to stay in the game as the system of party government has maintained for several hundreds of years
it will continue to do so, and Conservative and Liberal are the only parties to function in Canada.

PROVINCIAL EIGHTH FORTNIGHTLY CROP REPORT

As harvest approaches the condition of crops throughout the province is better than was anticipated earlier in the season, with the exception of the south-eastern part of the province and central eastern areas crops are good. In the eastern area where conditions were unfavorable throughout the early part of the growing period late rains have caused excellent growth of oats and barley, and if the frost free period is prolonged, there will be fair yields of wheat.The hot dry weather of the past fortnight has caused too rapid ripening of crops in the south-eastern part of the province where moisture was not plentiful. In the central and northern areas where heavy rains fell during July and where crops were maturing slowly, these high temperatures have caused more rapid ripening without serious injury to quality of crops.Wheat cutting has commenced in the south and will be general next week. Throughout the central and northern parts cutting will be general in from ten to fourteen days.Frost has been reported from one point in the Peace River district, but damage seems to have been slight.
Hail damage has occurred at several points throughout the province.Conditions with regard to pasture hay and feed are fairly satisfactory.
In the alfalfa growing areas, the second growth of alfalfa is fairly heavy and of excellent quality. The sugar beet crop is better than the average.

tions, will be general in a week to ten days. Recent extreme heat and lack of moisture have done considerable damage in Southern Saskatchewan and southeastern Alberta; but conditions in Alberta generally, have improved since the last report. It is now known that, especially in Manitoba, there will be considerable damage from rusting crops. In the Province of Quebec the weather, on the whole,
has been favorable, but in some districts haying has been completed,
of oats and barley it is well advanced.
In the Maritime provinces generally are in good condition, but rain is needed. In British Columbia with weather continuing hot and dry, harvesting conditions are good, grain is being cut in some districts, and an average yield of good quality is expected.Showers and continued warm weather in northeastern Alberta are rapidly bringing crops to fruition.
Small damage from hail has been reported. Southeastern harvesting has begun and while some wheat yields will run as high as twenty bushels, the average will be six to eight bushels. Western Area. Crops have made good recovery and an average return is expected. Regional hail damage of a serious nature has been reported. Harvesting will be general in two weeks. The sugar beet crop is 15 per cent better than normal, Saskatchewan. Crops are filling fairly well and ripening fast.
Some commercial fields promise fair yields, but generally the crop is much below average.After the new premier had been sworn in, His Excellency came up to the eastern block and there, in his presence, the oath of office was administered to each of the new ministers.The new ones took two oaths—first, as privy councillors and then as departmental ministers. Those already of the privy council didn't need to repeat the formality. Some nineteen Bibles, embossed in red and gold, were carried in, each minister receiving, as a customary so-venir, the testament upon which he was sworn.After the swear-in, the ministers moved into the privy council chamber and got down to business.All that was announced, after,
was that writs for the ministerial by-elections had been issued with nominations at the earliest possible date—the 25th inst.The following is a list of the new cabinet in order of precedence:

There is money in ducks. The Poultry Division of the Dominion Experimental Farms is authority for the statement that Pekin ducklings can be marketed at the age of six weeks at a profit over cost of feed and ducklings at $1.38 each. When marketed at this age ducklings are known as "green ducks." At ten weeks a green duck weighs about six pounds. It puts on weight rapidly up to this point, but after the tenth week feathers change and rate of growth is retarded.After the swear-in, the ministers
moved into the privy council chamber and got down to business.All that was announced, after,

BEEF—Good cattle have found a fairly active demand at Edmonton this week, but the medium and in-between kinds are draggy. Prices held about steady. Choice heavy steers made from $5.75 to $6; choice light $6 to $6.25; good $5.50 to $5.75; medium $5 to $5.25; and common $4 to $4.50. Choice heifers from $5.75 to $6; good kinds $5.25 to $5.50. Choice cow brought $4.75 to $5; good $4.25 to $4.75; medium $3.75 to $4; common $2.50 to $3.50; cullers and cutters $1 to $2. Choice bulls $2.50 to $3; medium $1.50 to $2; common $1 to $1.25. Choice calves from $8 to $9; common kinds from $4 to $6. FEEDERS—STOCKERS—Offerings in this market are finding a moderately active demand at steady prices. Feeders $4 to $5; stock steers $3.50 to $4.50 and stock cows $3 to $4.

HOGS

Edmonton reports bacon advanced 10c this week, making them $11.35; select $11.85 and butchers at $10.85 fed and watered.

SHEEP

Edmonton reports yearlings bringing $4 to $5; ewes $2.50 to $4.50, and lambs four to $8.

GRAIN

Demoralized grain prices of last week-end recovered rapidly during the present week under the reports of wilting corn crops in the Western United States, and also some damage to the crops in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Alberta's crop, having more rain recently, is expected to be better. One grain estimate has reduced the wheat yield to around 500,000,000 bushels but this seems too much of a cut.

CREAM—BUTTER—MILK

CREAM—Receipts at creameries holding up well, but slight decrease in evidence; better pasture may keep decline from being marked for a time. Centralization and country factories both quoting on basis of 25¢ to 27¢ for special grade. CREAMERY BUTTER—Surplus piling up and out let still limited to light coast shipping. DAIRY BUTTER—Fancy table only home-made quality meeting popular trademand at around 25¢; No. 1 from 18¢ down. MILK—Surplus still coming to the distributors.

POULTRY—EGGS

POULTRY—Receipts are light and crates about equally divided between fowl and springs. Demand fair and most killers going into distribution without delay. Best heavy fowl from 10¢ down; broilers and light weight over 2 lbs. 12¢ to 13¢. EGGS—Trade is steady and prices unchanged on a spread of 22¢ to 24¢ on extras and 20¢ to 22¢ on crack 16¢; 16¢ on seconds and cracks 13¢.

HAY — GREENFEED — OATS

Dealers are reporting offers of new crop coming more freely and already several cars of timothy have been handled. Prices easing off as cutting and baling gets ahead, and upland on truck at country points generally around $12; timothy at $18, but may weaken as shipments increase.

revenue received when the well is in production, together with reasonable interest.
Mr. Daugherty said that he personally wanted no commission for what he had done, all he wants is to see Wainwright on the map.
Mr. Daugherty however, warned his hearers that if something cannot be done in regard to handling the crude his company can see no alternative save to shut down.
He then passed on to the requirements of the company that all the leaseholders shall enter into an agreement with the company, and said that there is no doubt but that the establishment of the refinery will lead to renewed interest in the field, and that some of the leases now held in the future be developed into producing wells.
Regarding the present stagnation in the field, the speaker said that last year at this time Wainwright had a payroll of some $4,000 to $5,000 of oil field employees alone, but now there are none.
Every well said Mr. Daugherty will be required to have a complete set of tools. Dealing with statistics touching the cost of operating a well at Wainwright, Mr. Daugherty said that it will cost $1,295 per month to operate the seven wells, or $185 per well.

"What Wainwright wants," said Mr. Daugherty in conclusion, "is a little money and a little patching up."

In answer to questions he said that the present arrangements for refining are inadequate and unsatisfactory.

Mayor Forster said that he thought that Mr. Daugherty had underestimated the amount that can be produced at the field. A site of two and a half acres is ready for the refinery at Wainwright if arrangements are successfully carried out.

What Shall We Name The Baby?

A SYMPOSIUM BY INTERESTING PEOPLE OF TODAY
CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM A. LEWIN

To select a suitable name for each new baby that comes into the world is indeed an absorbing problem. Nearly 2,000,000 new babies were born last year. And yet there are less than 1,000 names to choose from. Parents search deep into directories for suggestions. Shall we create some interesting new names?

No. 20—KATHARINE PYLE

Gabriella is to me a very beautiful name. Pylella for a good old-fashioned name: Susan, Margaret, always Cecilia, the difficulty with that is the nickname Cissie. Caroline and I am fortunate in having for myself a name I like, Katharine, Deborah is also to me a very colorful name. To me there is a narrower choice in the names for boy babies. Edward, John Alexander, Cornelius, (perhaps one of the most beautiful names for boys) are a few of my favorite names for boys. While I do not care for the name Thomas, Tom has a gaiety to me that is pleasing.

CORNELIUS is a name of Latin origin meaning "horn." It's variant is Nelson. Cornelius Vanderbilt is an American financier.

GABRIELLA is a name of Hebrew origin meaning "heroine of God." It is the feminine of Gabriel.

ALPINE MEMBERS CAMP ON MOST BEAUTIFUL LAKE IN ROCKIES

WHERE year by year increasing thousands are turning to for rest and recreation, finding among its glorious ranges and by its exquisite lakes continual stores of joy and health, Jasper National Park will be visited this summer by Alpinists to the 25th Annual Camp of Alpine Club of Canada, in the Maligne region, July 28th to August 16th. Mountain climbers from all over Canada and the United States, many of whom will have their wives or husbands with them in attendance, as will also a number of distinguished visitors attending the British Medical Association Convention in Winnipeg, lie on hand to make the "out camp-fire" increase in interest.

To reach the main camp, the party will be conveyed from Jasper town or Jasper Park Lodge by motor car to Medicine Lake, about 20 miles to the upper end of the lake via motor boat, and from there to Maligne Lake a distance of about 9 miles, on foot, although a limited number of riding ponies will be available between the two lakes.

The main camp will be pitched close to the mouth of Coronet Creek at the south end of Maligne Lake, directly behind the camp, tower the buttressed walls of Mount Warren (10,800 feet). The first ascent of this peak was made by Max M. Strimma and William Hamworth in 1928, who, from their camp at the mouth of Warren Creek, at the southeast corner of the lake, made the ascent of the Thumb (9,200 feet); also of Mt. Florence (9,750 feet). These ascents can be made from the main camp, but with the assistance of a motor boat the route can be considerably shortened.

The double ascent of Mount Mary Vaux (10,250 feet) and its outlier, Mt. Lysyfran (9,900 feet), will be a popular expedition for beginners. To the northwest, another great group of mountains will claim the attention of the mountaineers, Mt. Leah and Mt. Sampson, impressive rock masses. Directly opposite them rise Mt. Charlton and Uluvin, topping all other peaks in the region and heavily draped in snow and ice. Directly south of these two massive rises Amer's Mt. Julian, climbed by him and Edward Fox last August for the first time.

In order to climb mountains too distant to be reached from the Main Camp an auxiliary camp will be placed at the head of Coronet Creek, some six miles away, and from here ascents will be made to Mt. Inceau (11,250 feet), Mt. Valud, Mt. Henry MacLeod (10,900 feet), Coronet Peak (10,000 feet), and other unnamed peaks. There are many minor expeditions for those whose tastes lean to less strenuous activities. Trips to places bearing such fascinating names as Sunshine Falls, Piz Valley and the Fall of the Veil of Tears are being considered.

The new Memorial Hut at Penstock Creek, in Torquay Valley, not far from Surprise Point, will be ready for members shortly before Camp. It is about twenty-five miles from Jasper, three miles from the Edith Cavell highway and the balance by trail. It is an excellent climbing center and many members will visit this wonderful region.

REFRESHING EATS

FOR THIS WEEK

(BY BETTY BARCLAY)

EAT GREENS INSTEAD OF PILLS

Now that fresh vegetables are on the market everywhere—and in the garden of those fortunate enough to own one—they should be featured upon the table even more than usual. It is a surprising thing about human nature that many men and women who rather turn up their noses at a salad, a dish of spinach, or even a piece of lettuce, will embrace when telling a friend about some kind of herb remedy recently discovered in the local drug store.

"It's full of greens and herbs," they will say, "Exactly the thing one needs to tune up his body engines."

Yet that same enthusiast refuses to eat greens of many kinds when they are brought to him at the table—as food instead of medicine. Vegetables in various particularly desirable in the diet in hot weather. They take the place of additional helpings of the heavy foods, and at the same time fill the body with roughage, minerals, salts and those much-needed vitamins. If eaten uncooked, they are particularly valuable, and fortunately, many of our most popular vegetables are eaten thus.

Lettuce, peppers, cucumbers, radish, cabbage (in salad), water cress, celery—all these may be eaten with out cooking. Carrots may be grated over a vegetable salad. Endive is appreciated by many as a raw salad green. Many of us are old-fashioned enough to find considerable delight in eating fresh peas as they come from the pod, or rubbing upon a piece of raw turnip.

Of course, most of these vegetables are used in various cooked forms. Lettuce is "wilted," cucumbers are "pickled" and celery is stewed. A probably someone, somewhere, has a recipe for cooking almost any vegetable. Much of the value of the vegetable remains when properly cooked, but there is no getting around the fact that the raw vegetable dish is the surest way to secure the full mineral and vitamin content of the vegetable used.

All vegetables have better flavor when fresh from the garden. This is particularly true if the vegetables are to be eaten raw. Long distance transportation is the worst enemy of fresh vegetables. Therefore, if your vegetables are to be enjoyed when they taste best, they should be grown in your own garden.

Here are recipes for two raw vegetable dishes that will fit nicely into the summer diet. Try them and see if they will not immediately become "regulars" upon your table:

Tomato Delight

4 medium tomatoes firm
1½ cups cabbage, chopped
1 tablespoon onion, finely chopped
1 tablespoon chopped green pepper
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon celery salt
¼ teaspoon paprika
mayonnaise to taste

Peel tomatoes, cut slice from top and carefully remove pulp. Mix above ingredients and fill tomato cases. Place on lettuce leaves and place portions of mayonnaise on top. Then serve very cold. Four portions.

Vitamin Salad

3 small heads lettuce
1 cup shredded tuna or salmon
½ cup chopped celery
2 tablespoons chopped green pepper
2 tablespoons chopped sweet pickle
1 teaspoon salt

Thousand Island Dressing (1 cup)
Wash lettuce, remove outside leaves cut in halves and remove cores. Arrange on platter. Mix fish, celery green pepper, pickle, salt and one-third of the dressing. Place in the lettuce cases and pour rest of dressing over the portions. Serve at once. Serves six. Either home-made or purchased dressing may be used.

THIS IS A CANNING YEAR

This is by all means a canning year. When I say canning I refer not only to canning produce but to preserving, conserving, pickling, and jelly making.

In spite of the fact that millions of cans and bottles of excellent delicacies will be distributed by commercial canners, everything points to an exceptionally large year of good old-fashioned canning in the home.

Never before have we been so enthusiastic over the value of fruits and vegetables in the diet. For this reason alone we should be anxious to prepare a goodly quantity for winter consumption.

Fortunately, sugar is selling at a low price as we have known since before the war, so that this particular ingredient does not need to cause us any financial worry. Incidentally, few appreciate the real value of the sugar used in canning and preserving. Not only does it bring out the flavor, but it furnishes quick-energy food during the winter months.

See to it that you can some beans beans, corn, and peas this year as well as your usual amount of berries and fruits.

The following steps should be followed in canning vegetables:

1. Clean the vegetables and pare if necessary.
2. Parboil or pre-cook as directed in the recipe.
3. Pack in sterilized jars. Those with glass tops and clamps are best.
4. Add salt and sugar, and hot water to fill jars.
5. Put new rubber rings in place, adjust tops but do not close them quite tight.
6. Place in steam pressure cooker and sterilize as long as specified in the recipe.
7. Remove from canner and seal tight. Place where a draft will not strike them while cooling.

Here are two excellent recipes for canning beans and corn:

Canned Beans

Use only young tender beans. Cut off the leaves but leave about 3 inches of the stem and all the root in order to prevent bleeding. Boil or steam for 15 minutes. Remove skins and pack into hot jars. Cover with boiling water and add 1 teaspoon salt and 1 teaspoon sugar to each quart jar. Sterilize immediately for 40 minutes at 10 pounds pressure.

Canned Corn

Remove husks and silk and cut from the cob. Pour on boiling water to cover and bring to the boil. Pack loosely in jars and add 1 teaspoon salt and 1 tablespoon sugar to each quart. Sterilize at once for 80 minutes at 15 pounds pressure.

SLEEP AND REST

Good habits of sleep and rest play a large part in securing the healthy development of children. Very many children do not get sufficient rest and, as a result, they do not grow or gain in weight. In addition their appetites are poor, or they are irritable and cranky. Perhaps the most frequent cause of malnutrition in children is lack of sufficient rest.

The Haunted Hall

Strange, isn't it, how familiar objects can assume weirdly mysterious shapes in the half darkness of an unlighted hall . . . strange how many unsuspected pieces of furniture there are to stumble over and how long it seems before you reach the light.

But it's not at all strange that you should bruise your shins and lose your temper completely in an entrance hall or any other part of your home that's "haunted" with darkness.

Good lighting fixtures, with conveniently placed switches, are easily installed, inexpensive and add to the attractiveness of your home a hundredfold. So why deny yourself the infinitely greater comfort and convenience they bring you?

A wide range of modern electrical appliances may now be purchased direct from the Calgary Power Company on a small down payment, the balance to be paid with your regular monthly light bills.

Opinions Of The Press Editorials

Decisive Defeat

Election returns are practically complete, only six seats remaining to be heard from. The government of Mr. Mackenzie King is decisively defeated and Mr. Bennett is returned with a substantial majority over all parties in the house. The present standing is Conservatives 135, Liberals 84, United Farmers 10, Progressives 2, Liberal Progressives three, Labor three, Independent two and doubtful six. It is thus clear that the conservatives are in a strong position having a substantial working majority.

It is far better for the country that since a change of government has taken place that the government should have an adequate majority rather than a stalemate resulting necessarily in another appeal to the country.

The essence of democracy is that the will of the people rules. The people have spoken. The majority prevails. It now becomes the duty of Mr. Bennett to carry out the pledges made to the electorate.—Halifax Chronicle.

Its Task Ahead

Favored by events and circumstances the Conservative party comes to a very great extent by what most of us call luck and by what pagans call fate.

To do the Conservative party justice it moved nicely and efficiently with the tide of fortune that swept it into power. Mr. Bennett proved himself worthy of the party leadership. His lieutenants in the various provinces lacked nothing in courage, intelligence and industry and the great body of the Conservative party gave evidence of renewed virility.—Winnipeg Tribune.

Nature of Victory

The Conservative party will be wise however, if it examines carefully the nature of its victory, & has not by its success relieved the country of a great menace, or defeated a specific measure which in the electors' judgment threatened a national misfortune. If circumstances were such that the Conservative party had done either of these things it might perhaps call its strenuous campaign a day and proceed to the leisurely performance of the duties of office. As it is the Conservative party has done little more than present its credentials to the electorate.

It has undertaken to accomplish certain things. To that formidable task it must now address itself. On the result of its efforts will depend the length of its tenure of office, and more important still, the degree of public esteem and gratitude which Mr. Bennett and his party will earn from high public service, ably and honestly rendered.

Hopeful Era

Under the caption "Canada Today Enters New and Hopeful Era," the leading editorial was devoted to jubilation at the Conservative victory at the polls, fearing nothing will be lost to the cause of Empire trade because the opponents of the Dunning budget are elected by a majority over all The Mail and Empire points out that Hon. R. B. Bennett was the first to suggest an Imperial Economic Conference and that he will go to the conference to build up a mutually satisfactory trade agreement by which Empire trade will be safeguarded by reciprocal trade agreements of a protective nature.

The Mail continues: "There is a great danger that, because of the extreme campaign conducted by the Liberal leaders and the Liberal press many people in Canada and elsewhere will regard yesterday's Conservative victory as a reverse for Imperial economic unity. It is nothing of the kind, a triumph for Mackenzie King would have placed the all-important cause of intra-Empire trade at the mercy of the politicians who have always been Pro-American and Anti-British in his course."

"The danger is, that if he had won he would have gone to the Imperial Conference, disagreed with the other Empire representatives present, and so reverted to the traditional Pro-American policy of closer trade relations with the United States."—Toronto Mail & Empire.

Only Solution

THE GLOBE regards the election turnover as a blow to the cause of Empire trade, stating that the "credit or currency must go to the electors." "It is the people's will that the realities of Empire as illustrated by the 'glorious gesture' of the Dunning budget, be disregarded in favor of the unknown."

To The Globe the defeat of the Dunning budget seems the most deplorable circumstance arising out of any Dominion election in sixty years. It was the only solution offered for the undesirable business conditions which have arisen, the only hope held out for those who thought matters could not be any worse. They were infinitely worse, and they will be if the new government does not proceed along the lines of the budget and seek energetically and determinedly to provide markets for the surplus products of the country. Lack of this provision was the utter weakness of the Conservative campaign; it should have remained a failure. The Dunning budget was correct in principle and in method from the standpoint of the Empire.

point of Canada's needs and from the standpoint of the Empire. It was the only genuine Canada first policy offered, because it recognized the trading requirements of this country.—Toronto Globe.

"Future-Cent" Speech

Unemployment was the principal factor in the election. "Had the premier been more sympathetic when the situation was laid before him" it says; "Had he strained every effort to find relief instead of standing on the letter of the constitution; had he not made his unfortunate five-minute speech, or, having made it, had not tried to justify it, he might have done better. But the tide was running strongly against him—more strongly, it has, turned out than he or his opponents realized—and it is doubtful if he could have prevailed."

His record—and it was a good record on the whole, served him not at all when the testing-time came. He has the misfortune to be in office when the wind went out of the balloon, and he had to come down.

Old Age Pensions

The other factor, the Province says, were more or less local and provincial Mr. Bennett's old age pensions promises in the Maritimes, Premier Fergusson's influence in Ontario, the waning of the free trade idea on the prairies, the preference given to British Columbia all helped the change along.

"It is from Quebec," the Province adds, "that the biggest surprise has come."—Vancouver Province.

Impressive Victory

It is a most impressive victory that the Conservative party has won. Not only will it have a safe majority over all other groups in Parliament combined, but it has obtained substantial support in every province. Because the new government will be so representative of the whole Dominion it will be able to accomplish much more than if it had derived its strength from certain sections while it was weak elsewhere.

The outcome makes it possible for Mr. Bennett to give the country a genuinely national administration and to speak and act in the name of all elements of its citizenship. The wide distribution of the Conservative members elected is more gratifying even than their number.

Were Responsible

For this, the outstanding feature of the result, the prairie west and Quebec are responsible. It was to the backing that he secured in these parts of the country that Mr. King owed his return to office four years ago. The marked change in sentiment that they have manifested shows how great was their dissatisfaction with certain of the government's policies.

It is a cause for especial satisfaction that the desperate effort that was made in Quebec to maintain the Liberal majority there by keeping alive the conscription issue failed so completely. Its people have demonstrated that they are no longer in the mood to be influenced by outworn cries and that what they are concerned about are the problems of today.—Edmonton Journal.

REMEMBER HOSPITAL

FRUIT SHOWER

No doubt many good housewives will remember that "it is more blessed to give than to receive" and in this connection The Star is again making its annual plea for ONE QUART OF FRUIT OR PICKLES for the Hospital. Donations to this shower can be left at this office, and an empty sealer will be given in exchange. When doing up the fruit this season please do up just one or two more for this cause in the full knowledge that the gift will be deeply appreciated.

PROVINCIAL POLICE WILL ENFORCE TRAFFIC RULES

A warning is herewith given to the public by the Alberta Provincial Police that the practice of fast driving through the streets of towns or villages, also the practice of making turns at other than the end of street blocks, must be discontinued at once. No further warning will be given. People who have been in the habit of breaking the laws in this respect will, if they continue to do so, find themselves haled into court. The following are extracts taken from the Motor Vehicles Act.

Section (19). No person shall operate a motor vehicle upon any public highway at a rate of speed greater than is reasonable or proper having full regard to the traffic and use of the highway or so as to endanger or to be likely to endanger the life or limb of any person or the safety of any property.

(20). No person shall operate a motor vehicle upon any public highway or street within any city town or village at a greater speed than one mile in three minutes nor a greater speed than one mile in six minutes in turning a corner of any intersection, public highway or street in any city town or village.

If the rate of speed of any motor vehicle shall in any case exceed the limit herein defined, it shall be prima facie evidence that the person operating such motor vehicle is running the same at a rate of speed greater than is reasonable and proper.

(21). Any person operating a motor vehicle on any street or highway within any city town or village shall operate such motor vehicle in such a manner that the same shall not cross over from one side of the street or highway to the other side thereof between intersecting streets or highways.

The speed law is the provincial one and is given when the different towns or villages have no speed laws through such towns or villages. It might be well to call attention to the fact that this also applies to home-drawn vehicles, and to saddle-horses, insofar as the turning at other than a street intersection or driving on the wrong side of the street is concerned.
